This study aims to evaluate a prototype of the Multi-party Synchronous Video Audio (MSVA) environment, which is the outcome of applying a novel human communication-centred design framework developed by Kanaswari. The study will assess how well the prototype (and indirectly, the design framework) improves collaboration and addresses communication needs not addressed in current MSVAs. It will also evaluate the prototype's technical performance, user interface, and overall user experience. By analysing user feedback, the study will provide valuable insights as to alternative configurations and augmentations, helping designers create more intuitive, context-aware online collaboration tools. All data collected during this study will be de-identified, anonymised, and securely stored.
